The Know Nothings appear to have spring up in the far-off regions of Nebraska as the for lowing original poetry, from the Onaha Arrow

DON'T KNOW. Who is it moves with silent pace. With brow serene and smiling face, Each word and action perfect grace? "I don't know-do you?"

Whose heart shines forth from kindled eyes, And listens to oppressions' cries, And when in danger never flies? "I don't know-do you?"

Who does not show, by tongue or pen, What he has learned—where he has been And keeps his thoughts from other men? "I don't know -do you?"

Who, when he sees his country ruled By men in foreign climates schooled, Thiaks as a freeman he is fooled? "I don't know-do you?"

Who, when he sees that Popish power Is gaining foothold every hour, Feels that a storm begins to lower? "I don't know-da you?"

Who feels that men born in this land, And 'gainst oppression dared to stand, Are just as good as "panper brand?" "I con't know-do you?"

LTHere is a short poem of a terribly tragic ature, and the style written is frightfully clear and simple: I saw him bare his throat, and seize The blue, cold, gleaning steel.

life was so soon to feel.

Then first I tound a tongue—
'Hold, madnero's av the frantic deed!'
I cried, and forth I spring.

He heard me, but he heeded not; One glance around he gave, And, see I could arrest his hand, He had—begun to share!

A Capitai Anecdote.

"A year or two since, a Mr. — was elected to represent the town of Shelburn, N. C., in the Legislature. He was a plain, old farmer, full of sound sense, and ready for any real work that was needed. When he made his appearance in the State Hanso it must be confessed. ance in the State House it must be confessed that his tout ensemble was anything but fashthe his tori; cusemble was anything out rash-ionable. His hat was a perfect relie of antiqui-ty—his coarse frock and trowsers of genuine dapple gray, homespan; his shirt boson the product of his wife's own bonn, and his boots product of his wife's own 100m, that are of the thickest and most substantial cow-hide. As Mr. B. entered the lobby there were several young 'members' standing around the fire, and young 'members' standing around the fire, and supposing the new comer to be only a visitor, they merely cast a glance at his weather-brown-
